Folklore: Something Old is Always New

CLARY CROFT

The study and appreciation of folklore is universal. However, many people think it comes from somewhere else and isn't a part of their daily lives. Folklore researcher, performer and writer, Clary Croft, has been working in this field all his life and will share songs stories and anecdotes from a remarkable career spanning over five decades. He'll explain how we use folklore on a regular basis - even as we move into the digital age.

Seating is limited to 100 people – on a first-come, first-admitted basis. Lectures are open to all. Registration is not required. Goodwill donations are gratefully accepted.

Light refreshments will be served. PLEASE BRING YOUR OWN MUG.

Please avoid wearing scents if possible – some people have allergies.
