Investment Fraud and Current Threats in the Marketplace

March is Fraud Prevention Month. This presentation will discuss how the Nova Scotia Securities Commission can assist investors who have complaints about investment firms, frauds, and new initiatives aimed at seniors. Discussion will include various types of investment fraud and current threats in the marketplace. At the end of the presentation, you will have greater knowledge that you can use to protect yourself from becoming a victim of investment fraud. Practical tips gleaned from many years of investigating real cases will be offered.

LIANNE BRADSHAW is a Senior Investigator with over 15 years experience at the Nova Scotia Securities Commission. In her role at the Commission, she has investigated cases involving stock brokers, financial planners, investment firms, insider trading, Ponzi schemes, and other investment frauds such as on-line trading scams. Prior to joining the Commission staff, Lianne was involved in the securities industry in the area of compliance and oversight. Lianne holds a Business Administration degree from St. Francis Xavier University and an MBA from St. Mary's University. Lianne has a passion for assisting investors, particularly seniors who have concerns about their accounts and investments.

Seating is limited to 100 people – on a first-come, first-admitted basis. Lectures are open to all. Registration is not required. Goodwill donations are gratefully accepted.
